Compassion for Animals in the Age of the Anthropocene

Mon, Oct 27
2:30- 4:00 pm

Center for Ethics
Room 162
1531 Dickey Drive

Even in polarized times, most Americans agree that compassion for animals matters. Yet for decades our laws and institutions have failed to protect animals when it's most consequential. Can we hope to change course in the Anthropocenic era when compassion itself seems under attack? Join us for a heartfelt conversation about legal and policy protections for the well-being of animals with scholars who see enormous scope for positive change.
